Last updated on - August 12, 2004

The eucalyptus distillery, at St Arnaud appears to have been constructed in 1885 and perhaps altered and extended in the late 1940s/early 1950s. The site consists of a low brick structure and tall face brick chimney stack.

The eucalyptus distillery is architecturally significant at a LOCAL level. It demonstrates original and early design qualities of a nineteenth century industrial design. These qualities include the tall brick chimney stack and use of face bricks in the low brick structure.

The eucalyptus distillery is historically significant at a LOCAL level. It is associated with local eucalyptus industry, especially with the Bray family operations.

The eucalyptus distillery is scientifically significant at a LOCAL level. It appears to demonstrate technological processes no longer generally in use, and has a strong presumption of archaeological research potential.

Overall, the eucalyptus distillery is of LOCAL significance

Physical Description 1

The eucalyptus distillery now consists of a low brick structure with a tall rectangular brick chimney stack at one end. The low brick structure is protected by a modern steel framed and clad roof and there are adjacent late twentieth century sheds clad in corrugated steel.

The brick chimney appears to have been increased in height as there is a slight change in brick type and dimension in the last one fifth of the tower. There is a minor loss of bricks in the top course.
