Physical Description 1

This is not one of Terry's more notable churches. It has strange proportions, with a high gable roof on low walls broken by single buttresses. Between the buttresses are segmental headed windows with quatrefoil tracery of an Early English design. The gable end has a large lancet headed window with Perpendicular Gothic tracery above the lancet arched doorway. The main interest of the church is the juxtaposition of the nave and separate tower of Norman design which is highly unusual
