

East Collingwood Rifles Volunteer Orderly Room

EAST COLLINGWOOD
RIFLES VOLUNTEER
ORDERLY ROOM SOHE
2008

1 east collingwood rifles
volunteer ordely room east melbourne

east collingwood rifles plan

Location

444-446 VICTORIA PARADE and CNR POWLETT STREET EAST MELBOURNE, Melbourne City

Municipality

Level of significance

-

Victorian Heritage Register (VHR) Number

H1801

Heritage Overlay Numbers

HO889

Heritage Listing

Vic. War Heritage Inventory

Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

What is significant?

The timber East Collingwood Rifles Volunteer Orderly room was initially constructed in 1864 by builder William Radden with donations from members of the unit. The hall was at that time situated at the north west corner of a reserve which had been used as a cricket ground. Following the defence reforms of Sir Frederick Sargood in 1884 the East Collingwood orderly room was one of the few metropolitan halls taken over by the government for the newly formed paid militia. In 1885 additions were made in the form of attached offices, a new transverse hall and a sergeant-major's quarters (since demolished). These additions were designed by Victorian Public Works Department architect Samuel Bindley and their detailing is typical of many other drill halls of the period. In 1937 a brick addition was made to the north end of the 1864 building in the moderne style and the 1864 hall was given a jarrah floor to replace the former asphalt. The drill hall has been used by a variety of army units including infantry, artillery, ordnance and survey. The 1864 hall still has an extensive shingle roof under its corrugated iron.

How is it significant?

The East Collingwood Rifles Volunteer Orderly Room is architecturally and historically important to the State of Victoria.

Why is it significant?

The East Collingwood Rifles Volunteer Orderly Room is historically important as one of only two surviving timber orderly rooms from the volunteer era of Victorian colonial defences, the other being the Richmond Rifles orderly room in Gipps Street Richmond. Its continual use for defence training purposes since 1864 adds to its significance. The place is also historically significant for its associations with the volunteer movement in Victoria, particularly the East Collingwood Rifles. The 1885 additions are an important manifestation of the defence reforms of the 1880s. The 1937 brick addition is of interest as a manifestation of the increased spending on defence after years of decline in the lead up to the Second World War.

The East Collingwood Rifles Volunteer Orderly Room is architecturally important for the survival, almost intact within the later additions, of the now rare timber early colonial volunteer orderly room of 1864. The survival of the timber shingle roof is a remarkable, rare and highly significant feature.

Construction dates 1864,

Architect/Designer	Bindley, Samuel Ebdon,
Heritage Act Categories	Registered place,
Hermes Number	125299
Property Number

Physical Description 1

see Powlett Street Drill Hall Conservation Management Plan prepared by Allom Lovell and Associates, October 1997

Physical Conditions

see Powlett Street Drill Hall Conservation Management Plan prepared by Allom Lovell and Associates, October 1997 State of Historical Environment survey -Fair condition see events

Usage/Formal Usage

1864 - military

Veterans Description for Public

The timber East Collingwood Rifles Volunteer Orderly room was initially constructed in 1864 by builder William Radden with donations from members of the unit. The hall was at that time situated at the north west corner of a reserve which had been used as a cricket ground. In 1884, following the defence reforms of Sir Frederick Sargood, the East Collingwood orderly room was one of the few metropolitan halls taken over by the government for the newly formed paid militia. In 1885 additions were made in the form of attached offices, a new transverse hall and a sergeant-major's quarters (since demolished). These additions were designed by Victorian Public Works Department architect Samuel Bindley and their detailing is typical of many other drill halls of the period. In 1937 a brick addition was made to the north end of the 1864 building in the moderne style and the 1864 hall was given a jarrah floor to replace the former asphalt. The drill hall has been used by a variety of army units including infantry, artillery, ordnance and survey. The 1864 hall still has an extensive shingle roof under its corrugated iron.

Extent of Registration

1. All of the building known as the East Collingwood Rifles Volunteer Orderly Room marked B1 on Diagram 607986 held by the Executive Director.
2. All of the land marked L1 on diagram 607986 held by the Executive Director being all of the land described in Certificate of Title Volume 5809 Folio 797.

This place/object may be included in the Victorian Heritage Register pursuant to the Heritage Act 2017. Check the Victorian Heritage Database, selecting 'Heritage Victoria' as the place source.

For further details about Heritage Overlay places, contact the relevant local council or go to Planning Schemes Online <http://planningschemes.dpcd.vic.gov.au/>