Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

This site is a large domestic rubbish midden dating from the early Twentieth Century. It is significant because it has the potential to reveal the eating habits, domestic activities and the socio-economic status of the residents of this large formerly rural area during this period.

Interpretation of Site	Artefacts are possibly associated with early 20th century occupation (domestic) of the area. The site is now protected road reserve.
Archaeological Significance	Low local significance. The integrity of the site appears to have been compromised with the construction of the footpath, however the area is now restricted.
Historical Significance	Low historic significance. Artefacts may relate to early 20th century occupation of the area.
