Victorian Heritage Inventory

Interpretation of Site	Collapsed wooded structure which appears to be made from old railway sleepers. Wood is completely entwined with trees and thick vegetation. Peppercorn tree with bluestone and brick formation is a potential European burial.
Archaeological Significance	Site is likely to be of local significance particularly if the bluestone and brick formation relate to a burial. These features are in relatively good condition. The wood ruin is overgrown with thick vegetation but still recognisable as a built structure.
Historical Significance	The site may have some local historical significance if the bluestone and brick formation is a European burial
