Memorial Window Description & History

The memorial window was designed and made in England and the series of letters among the papers of stained glass artist, William Montgomery shows that the Headmaster of Geelong Grammar School, Dr FE Brown, entrusted Montgomery with all matters regarding landing, customs, duties, insurance and delivery of the two-light St. Giles and St. Francis of Assisi window, ordered by Thomas O'Halloran Giles.

The Secretary of Whall & Whall Ltd, London wrote to Montgomery with details of its passage from England on the SS Palermo on 25 January 1924, consigned to Mr HW Lloyd, 22 King William Street, Adelaide. Unfortunately, by the time the window arrived the stonework for that portion of the chapel was not ready to take the stained glass and St. Giles and St. Francis remained in storage until after Montgomery's death in 1927; it was finally installed in 1929. Christopher Whall (1849-1924) was the leading Arts & Crafts artist in stained glass in Britain and, although this must be among his last works, it remained true to his ideals of truth to materials. Napier Waller, who would go on to provide a number of windows for All Saints' Chapel, described Whall's stained glass a 'a thing of colour and architectural unity'.

Robert O'Halloran Giles was the second son of Thomas and Joanna (nee Barr-Smith) O'Halloran Giles, born at Aldgate, South Australia on 28 January 1897. After schooling at Queen's College, Adelaide and Geelong Grammar School at Corio in Victoria, he trained in England and then joined the 1 King Edward's Horse as a cavalry officer. The regiment was part of the King's Yeomanry whose members were part time cavalry units from the Dominions, including the Australian Light Horse. After fighting on the Italian front and in France, Second Lieutenant O'Halloran Giles was wounded and taken prisoner. He died of his wounds in Belgium on 26 April 1918 and was buried at Tournai Communal Cemetery Allied Extension, aged 21.
