Physical Description 1

A large tract of land, approximately three quarters of the area of "The 100 Acres", occupying a hill top with south, west and north facing slopes, and bounded on the west side by Mullum Mullum Creek.

The reserve contains a visitor information centre, a compound for small kangaroos and wallabies and a degraded pond.

Remnant woodland demonstrates variations of plant communities with change of topographical elevation and orientation.

Two Aboriginal scarred trees offer an opportunity for public education [6].

The site is much more degraded than 'The 100 Acres'. An ecological assessment and management plan are required.
