Physical Description 1

A red brick and stucco church in the Gothic revival manner which is distinguished by its exceptionally tall, slated spire and the row of gabled side chapels at the west and east elevations. Composed successfully as an integration of gabled, differently sized forms which are also repeated, in details such as roof vents and parapet stepping. Unusual engaged columns, at the nave gable, support bartizan towers which are also placed over angle buttresses to the tower. Internally, lacquered lining boards, by their linear patterns, highlight the interlocking side-chapels and nave forms and provide a richness of colour. A pipe organ is set in the apse.

Externally, generally original except for the removal of the front fence (presumed picket), the addition of concrete paving, and the intrusive placement of a large illuminated cross-over the bell-tower vent. Trim colours have changed. The former Church Hall is at one side. It is a brick gabled fronted hall.

Set axially to Pratt Street, also designed to be viewed in three dimensions, via oblique views from the west. Elements of the surrounding residential area are contemporary with the church. (Refer Ascot Vale Estate, Conservation Areas).
