SIGNIFICANCE: Hamilton Club is the social focus of the squatters, professionals and merchants of the city. Its architecture represents formality, dignity and respectability.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Hamilton Club
41 Gray Street

This building has regional significance as the social focus of the squatters, professionals and merchants of the Hamilton district. Designed in 1878 by the notable architects, Smith & Johnson, ([i]) it has architectural interest for the quality of its classical detailing, including tripartite windows, frieze and obelisks. It has historical importance for its associations with the Hamilton Club, which was formed in 1875 and met at first in rented rooms at the Commercial Hotel. The aim was to provide relaxation and entertainment for leading townsmen and a place where pastoralists and other gentlemen could stay. ([ii]) According to an 1895 Victorian Tourists' Guide, it was 'frequented by the best of the Western District folks.' ([iii]) The first stage of the building, completed in 1879, cost 3,000 pounds. ([iv]) Additions were made to the east side of the building in 1956. ([v]) The building is significantly intact and in excellent condition. It is a key building in the streetscape of Gray Street being on the corner at the entrance to the commercial area. It is complimented by the adjacent former Mechanics Institute and the Post Office. Its architectural style can be compared with the early 20th Century facade of the Masonic Temple in Lonsdale Street.
