Physical Description 1

This is an altered verandahed and hipped roof stuccoed farm house with thick walls which are reputed to have been constructed from sod. This construction could not be verified. The verandah is hipped and returns on three sides and the roof is clad with corrugated iron. The brick (overpainted) chimney tops are corbelled, an indication of a mid to late 19th century origin. Another hipped wing has been added to the rear of the house. The garden contains mature exotic remnant planting including a Trachycarpus fortuneii (Chusan palm).

Physical Conditions

The house has been altered externally and internally with its construction method the only remaining potentially notable aspect.
