Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

The features identified confirm the existence of past mining activities and combine to create a mining landscape, however the significance of this landscape is very low due to the degraded nature and common occurrence of alluvial landscapes in the region. There is very little archaeological significance at this site.

History

Gold was first discovered at One Eye Gully along the Canadian Creek (broadly known as Canadian Gully) in the early 1850's and by 1855 a deep lead along the eastern boundary of the study area was being worked (Withers 1980: 198). Subsequently, the area was utilised for small scale farming.

This place/object may be included in the Victorian Heritage Register pursuant to the Heritage Act 2017. Check the Victorian Heritage Database, selecting 'Heritage Victoria' as the place source.
