Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

A complex State Architectural, historic and social significance. The Prahran Market, founded on its present site in 1881, is one of the oldest surviving public market places in Melbourne. The large rendered brick building fronting Commercial Road was built in 1891 to designs by the notable architect Charles D'Ebro and is substantially original externally except for extensive ground floor alterations and paintwork. This building is one of the few large-scale and most ornate terrace shop rows in Melbourne. Between 1976 and 1982 the market was substantially rebuilt to the designs of the Gunn Hayball partnership. The use of curved tubular steel and corrugated iron, perforated steel panels and pastel colours, the sympathetic refurbishing of historic buildings and the incorporation of contextual elements make this a notable innovative work of the period. The rebuilt Prahran Market received the RIAA Award of Merit 1982 and remains intact.

The market site has been of enormous social significance for over a century.

Physical Description 1

The D'Ebro-designed rendered brick building is a large, imposing symmetrical facade incorporating decorative elements derived from the Queen Anne revival. Nothing is left of the 1890s interior of the building except for the barrel-caulth entry way and iron gates. Nothing remains of the rear facade except for the roof. The 1970s covered market area is a simple, functional, large span steel truss shed. The courtyard section facing Commercial Road includes curved tubular steel and corrugated iron, perforated steel panels and a pastel colour scheme indicative of architectural concerns in the late 1970s and early 1980s.
