Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

The J. T. Smith house is of local historical importance being erected and then occupied for a short term (1857-60) by J. T. Smith, celebrated public figure, foundation Melbourne City Councillor and seven times Mayor, and State politician. The house is of architectural interest as a colonial town house of the immediate post gold rush era, and if substantiated, a rare and representative surviving work of important early Melbourne architect David Ross.

Physical Description 1

The two storey 11 room brick house constructed with slate roof, rendered facade, symmetrically displaced french windows and later cast iron balcony veranda is a colonial town house design reminiscent of the regency architecture of N.S.W and Tasmania.

The original character of the house at 30 Darling Street, South Yarra has been substancially affected by the erection of a later cast iron balcony veranda and by part replastering of the facade. The interior has not been inspectedand the house is now divided into flats.
