Physical Description 1

BUILDINGS: Annandale, originally in the Queen Anne domestic style, was considerably altered and extended by Percy Cornwell from the 1920s, usually in materials from his factory. Fish-scale terracotta cladding was placed in the gable end, a brick hit and miss fence was added to both frontages and numerous outbuildings were added, in terracotta lumber, at the rear. Subsequently the verandahs have been enclosed and other alterations made to the house. LANDSCAPE: The fence and adjacent beds of Agapanthus are important elements, contributing to the adjoining streetscape. The fence is brick hit and miss, constructed from Cornwell's bricks, while the numerous outbuildings at the rear are terracotta lumber.
