Physical Description 1

St Paul's Anglican Church was designed in the Primitive Gothic style and built in 1913 and is a very late example of this style. It resembles a number of churches in the study area but is unusual for the roof ventilators which are more commonly seen on school buildings of the period. Variations in building materials are evident across the Bendigo region and St Paul's, like St Mary's and St Andrew's, are all of the local bluestone from the Axedale quarry. The stone is squared and coursed and decoration is confined to brick dressings around the door and window openings, and a label mould above the entry door. The windows have diamond pattern leaded glass. The site comprises the church and a weatherboard hall (removed from Junortoun) linked by a roof to a small timber building close to the church.
