Statement of Significance

Last updated on -

The apartments at No. 466 Hawthorn Road, Caulfield South, were built in 1936 for Miss Florence Gerstman. They are aesthetically significant.

They are aesthetically significant (Criterion E) as uncommon examples of residential buildings undertaken in a manner directly influenced by the work of Frank Lloyd Wright, comparing in Glen Eira only with the house at No. 45 Balaclava Road but demonstrating that the influence of his work was still being felt in Melbourne during the late Inter War years.

Physical Description 1

A large Inter War apartment development after the style of Frank Lloyd Wright with deep overhanging eaves with angled fascias and shallow tiled hipped roof, and characteristic emphasis being given to the corners by recessing them at the eaves line and setting them against vertical piers. The strength of the design turns on the treatment of the horizontal and vertical elements, emphasis to the forms being given by the use of stuccoed and tapestry brick surfaces, some since over painted, semi-circular balconettes and elevated terraces with rebated tapestry brick courses creating horizontal shadow lines. The cement balusters have been given geometric treatment in the front also characteristic of the Wright School

Physical Description 2

Integrity: High, includes rockery to property line and wrought iron gates.

Physical Description 3

Condition: Sound, garages at the rear appear not to be in use.

Historical Australian Themes

Caulfield as a pre-eminent Inter War suburb.
