Statement of Significance

Last updated on - July 11, 2008

Site is possibly remnants of earliest Portarlington Pier c. 1859 and contains potential archaeological deposits beneath paved roadway. Locally significant.

Interpretation of Site	Steel piers and timber rails probably related to earlier jetty or parts there of. It is clear from old maps & plans that a substantial area of sand on the shoreline and beach has accreted since the construction of the jetty. This, coupled with the presence of the clearly raised roadway at the approach to the jetty suggest that other remnants of earlier jetty elements may be present beneath the asphalted roadway. Remnants of former jetty shed may also be present on west side of roadway.
