Statement of Significance

Last updated on - January 1, 2008

Gowrie is of state architectural and historical Significance. It is one of the oldest surviving houses in the Broadmeadows district and an early homestead of noted pastoralist James Robertson. Architecturally, it is a relatively rare and externally intact example of a traditional Scottish laird's house.

Physical Description 1

Gowrie is a one-and-a-half storey bluestone house in the style of a Scottish laird's house, with a gabled slated roof, prominent gable dormer windows, dressed stone quoins and copings. The exterior is essentially in original condition, complete with '1855' foundation stone. Alterations include the replacement of the original windows, and the addition of the gabled entrance porch.

The 1960s additions, and associated new outbuildings, are of unpainted concrete block construction.

Key Architectural Elements: bluestone construction; slate roof; unusual style

Conservation Guidelines: reinstate windows and doors to original design; remove non-original porch remove paint from bluestone side walls; preferably remove unsympathetic 20th century additions

Comparative Examples: Meadowbank (now the Manor House), Campbellfield, early 1850s.

Principal Historic Themes: primary production/early agricultural/farming activity
