Statement of Significance

Last updated on - July 26, 2005

A two-manual organ of 11 stops by an unknown English builder initially placed in St Patrick's Cathedral, Melbourne until 1880. The instrument was later in St Brigid's Roman Catholic Church, North Fitzroy and the Congregational Church, Castlemaine before being installed at its present location in 1983. It had sustained only minor alterations since its enlargement to two manuals in the 1880's by Alfred Fuller, of Kew. The organ is of particular interest for its classical three-tower case, incorporating dummy wooden pipes, and the presence of many pipes of late 18th or early 19th-century origin.
