Statement of Significance

Last updated on - March 19, 2008

The Vaucluse is of considerable architectural and historical importance for it survives as a rare example, if not the only example, of a private street remaining in the inner suburbs of Melbourne. Richmond, with Fitzroy, was the first residential area developed once the tiny settlement spread beyond what we now call the Central Business District. It was professional and businessmen who were attracted to the fashionable street, purchased atop Richmond Hill. Here they were built their large homes during the 1870s- 1880s.
