Statement of Significance

Last updated on - May 25, 2005

Portions of these creek valleys have been identified as having high botanic significance and the remainder is generally considered to have high-moderate significance. The section south-east of Monbulk has additional ecological value as the juxtaposition of different vegetation communities provides an area (ecotone) which contains a great number and diversity of plant species and therefore is likely to support a wider range of animal species.

In addition, these areas have a high visual and recreational value. They provide visual contrast to the surrounding residential areas and good recreational facilities that are related to the environmental features of the area.

LOCATION AND BOUNDARIES:
